Hey there teens! These days, there are just so many forms of media that are all grabbing for our attention, right? With your Vines, Snapchats, and Instagrams, you might not know just where to point those peepers of yours! Well point them right here, and then here, and so on, down this page as I give the pre-teens, the tweens, the jocks, nerds, and burgeoning young adults all what they really want: long-form written impressions of classic characters of the page and screen.

Alright here's an easy one to get us started; pay attention and see if you can guess who it is! This is fun, right?

Impression 1: You tawkin' to me? I said is you tawkin' to me? Well I'm the only one hee-yah, so who the hell else is you tawkin' to, huh?

Think you got it? Did you guess Robert De Niro in his classic portrayal as Travis Bickle in the 1976 picture Taxi Driver? If so, congratulations! You were very close to the correct answer! This line actually comes from a transcript of a 911 call to the Phoenix Police Department's Dispatch Office. The call came from regional celebrity and De Niro impersonator

Jeremy Doherty, who called the police in response to a breaking-and-entering he witnessed in west Phoenix. Wow! A fun game, humor, and a little history lesson all in one article? We're having fun now, huh?!

Now that we got the obvious one out of the way, let's take it up a notch! Here it comes, impression number two! Boy oh boy, this must be at least as fun as your last gym class!!

Impression 2: Awright, the FIRST rule of Fight Club is: You do not talk about Fight Club. The SECOND rule of Fight Club is: C'mon guys, pleaseee do not talk about Fight Club...And the eighth and final rule: if this is your first night at Fight Club, welcome, come on in, because you have to fight...just don't talk about it okay guys? This could get me in biggggg trouble with the cops, and MY WIFE IS A DETECTIVE!

Alright, alright, alright, who do you think we have here? This one is a toughie, but if you made it this far, I know you must be a real pop-culture/impression buff. Haha, wait, I just realized I accidentally did another impression in the first line of this answer, haha! That's so much fun, like that family reunion when we all went to at the water park, and someone spiked the fruit punch! Anyway, sorry for doing the two impressions; that was probably confusing. Let's just call this one a pass.

Hey okay, here we are, the big numba three! This one oughta be a humdinger! I asked this one to my whole claymation class, and only John and Laura got it, so good luck! Even if you don't get it, have fun, and remember these are just for fun!

Impression 3: What's the deeeeaall with being a BEE?! I mean you wake up, you buzz around your room a while, then it's off to the hive in order to appease the eternal hunger of the all-knowing and ever-demanding Queen! Can a bee-guy just catch a break? Sometimes we all just want to go out on the town, maybe make some mistakes, and just see what happens! I mean we're bees for honey's sake!

Well done, you made it to the final answer! Now before you submit your final response, I just want to take a moment to reflect on the ride we just took together. Let's go to the monitor, Kathy. Look, there you are! Haha, back on impression one, remember that? Gee, take a look at your face. You're all like "Blaghh haha what's the answer? Haha I can't even imagine what impression 3 is going to be like if this is impression number 1!" Haha, that's great; thanks, Kelly. You can take camera back to me. Alright, do you have your answer? Know what you're gonna say? I have an idea, how about we say it together. Three, two, one! Dodgeball: A True Underdog Story!!! Hey you got it - way to go! Alright well that's all the time we have here on Who Said THAT? See ya' next week jabronies.

Gov Jeb Bush is a disappointment to the Bush dynasty

by Sophie Comeau

Web Editor

Ever since Jeb Bush dropped out of the race for the Republican presidential race, his home life has been rough. He goes home to his aging father and his older brother and is looked upon as the family failure. "I knew he should also have been named George," says his mother Barbara. The disappointment on her face is evident as Jeb sulks about the house. Jeb is the true failure of the house and can never seem to do anything right.

In the Bush household, there is always one person who can be seen as the scapegoat for all problems: Jeb. Who left the jar of the peanut butter off? It was Jeb. Who left the toilet seat up which led to Barbara falling in the toilet? It was Jeb. Who forgot to buy the ketchup for the hamburgers? It was Jeb.

"First you become the Governor of Florida and then fail to become president. Then you buy all the food for dinner and forget the freaking ketchup. You are obviously a failure," said his father, former President George H.W. Bush. This type of ridicule is common in the Bush household nowadays. Jeb continues to live day to day, constantly remembering that he failed his brother and his father. It is all he can think about, and every day is weighed down by the presidency that never was. Nearly one billion dollars was spent on Jeb Bush's campaign, and if that isn't failure, then what is? Jeb is like the accidental child that no one wanted and can't do anything right.

"What does that spray tanning, wall building Trump have that I don't?" Jeb wonders. "I knew I should have worn a toupée, that's why people love Trump!" Jeb's failed presidential candidacy continues to haunt his father. "I failed as a father. George, my name sake, was successful. Jeb, poor Jeb. The failure must eat him alive. I always knew George was my favorite, and now I know why." This burden weighs on George H.W. Bush, as well as George W. Bush.

"I did not teach him well enough. He is a loser and a failure. Why Jeb, WHY?"

No one can see the true Jeb, who he is underneath all the show. He is much more than the Jeb that people see him as. His family's opinions matter to him, he takes them to heart.

"I want to change my name. I need a new start and not as Jeb," Jeb says. Jeb then makes the most important decision of his life: to change his name. He goes to the place where you change your name and changes his name to George, just George. No last name, no middle name, just George.

"I can start anew without any preconceptions or expectations attached." Jeb then walks out of the name changing center with a new look on life.

"To quote Jasmine, I'm in a whole new world." Jeb walks away; no, he skips away, living life now as a Bush-free man.

Char shares secrets of prep

Have you ever wanted people to know you'll definitely be joining Greek life in college or that your parents support the GOP just by looking at you? Ever since Vineyard Vines decided to plague the West Coast, both of these are possible. So settle into your PB Teen bedding and consider these five tips to better communicate your parents' stance on immigration through your appearance.

Tip #1: Familiarize yourself with the Vineyard Vines logo (that one pink animated whale). Lucky for you, VV slips whale stickers into the packaging of every purchase, so you'll be able to adorn all of your favorite belongings with the logo. It should reach a point where people think VV is paying you to brand for them, but in reality you are just preppy and flaunting it. Specific belongings you should be sure to brand: your car, your computer, your phone, your backpack, and you should also have it tattooed on your lower back. Also, carry around pink graffiti with you and tag every public area you go to with the logo. This may compromise your criminal record (if caught), but it will help cement your prep status.

Tip #2: Buy colors that are offensively bright. If you glance at your closet, it should take you about 5-10 minutes to recover from the exposure to such a bright color palette. No longer are you allowed to buy jeans in light wash or dark wash; no, no, you are looking for colors like "lime" and "tropical pink." Make sure you've avoided denim completely and are buying khaki material pants only. You aren't about to accessorize with an oversized corduroy jacket and Dr. Martens, are you? No, you aren't. So drop denim completely, it's too edgy.

Tip #3: Accessorizing is now an everyday sport in which practice is necessary to achieve perfection [in the art]. All the preppy ladies out there, make sure you stack as many Alex & Ani bangles on your arms as you can. It should get to a point where your arm is locked at a 90 degree angle from the number of bangles you are sporting. To further the amount of prep on your wrists, add a rope anchor bracelet. You will literally be wearing a bracelet made of rope with an anchor charm on it, as if to whisper, "I'm nautical and you know it," (totally fine to wear even if you haven't been on a boat before or if you aren't even sure which ocean the state you live in borders).

Around your neck, depending on the season, should either be a monogrammed/customized necklace or a knitted infinity scarf in the winter. And regardless of season, relationship status, or hair color, you should always, always, always be wearing an anchor print belt.

Tip #4: Constantly make people who do not pursue a preppy lifestyle feel inadequate. The prep lifestyle IS the elite lifestyle and those too liberal to follow suit should be treated as they have chosen to be: low class. Like is it really your fault that their disgusting Converse somehow got squashed underneath your Tory Burch riding boots while you were both trying to leave the classroom at the same time?

Also backpacks are too grungy, so invest in a Longchamp tote bag to carry around your school supplies and give you critical shoulder pain on one side. You'll look professional and mature in the high school environment you are sooooo over.

Tip #5: Footwear should hurt to wear. The aforementioned nautical theme should also be present in your choice of footwear. Sperry Topsiders will make you look like you don't really know what is going on ever and like you are supposed to be boarding a big sailboat within the hour, but buy them anyways. You'll also have to forfeit wearing socks at least one in every three times you wear your Sperry's because the one pair of socks you own that doesn't show when you wear your Sperry's will be dirty.

Follow these tips on pursuing the preppy lifestyle and watch your friends develop style envy and drop you. Just remember that your friends are not the perfect accessory; a silver anchor bracelet is.

Antonia explains scene style

by Antonia Salisbury

Editor-in-Chief

Do you ever wake up, look in the mirror, and think, "wow, I wish there was a way that people could know how much I hate my mom based on my appearance." Well, ever since 2007, there has been a way! Dressing "scene" is sure to get you noticed. From thigh high Converse to My Chemical Romance, there are options for every BrokenNCYDE (look it up) fan out there. So sit back, grab a can of Monster, and read these five tips to perfectly cultivate your scene aesthetic.

Tip #1: Invest in some new makeup. The first thing to consider in developing your look is eyeliner. Take the black liquid and gently apply it to the entire circumference of your eye. Be careful not to miss a single degree. Next, try out a new 'do!

Side swept bangs and a layered mullet are a must (if we can see both your eyes, you're doing it wrong). Feather hair extensions are totally on the right track. Dye your locks with any dye you can pick up at your local Rite Aid so long as the color's name could also be a flavor of gatorade. From there, there's not much left to do. Snake bite piercings, fingerless gloves, and gauges will help you give out those mysterious vibes, and a couple of hickeys will make you America's #1 dark angel.

Tip #2: Go on a shopping spree. You can't call yourself scene if you don't dress it, am I right? To start, get a pair of dark, studded, ripped, and incredibly low-waisted jeggings. Fasten those on with a neon plastic belt and some zebra vans. You can't go wrong with a beanie with animal ears or maybe a simple and sleeveless hoodie. When you're done, just linger around the mall for a month or two, skulking in and out of Hot Topic, a ghost of your former mallrat self.

Tip #3: Tumblr is a must, but not just any old Tumblr. I'm talking fan fiction. This is a non-negotiable part of being scene. Take your favorite stories with a dark magic element (Harry Potter, Twilight, The Walking Dead, and Supernatural are all excellent choices), and make it your own. Popular themes include "Seven Minutes In Heaven," "Seven Hours in Heaven," and "Twenty-four Hours in Heaven."

Tip #4: Know your party scene. Sure, there's nothing like a good kickback with all of your middle school emo friends, but raving is where it's at. Just bring a pacifier, rave gloves, and your PLUR attitude to have a great time.

Beware of normo raves, such as Wobbleland and Snowglobe. A good rule of thumb is to search for anything "underground." By that, I mean that it must be literally located at least two yards below the earth's crust. Concerts are passable but must feature one of the following bands: Panic At The Disco, Fall Out Boy, A Fire Inside, or anything presented at Warped Tour.

Tip #5: Last but not least, make sure your friends know that, even though you've changed, your friendship doesn't have to. Poke them on Facebook, or send a quick "rawr, I love you" their way. It's simple and sweet, just like your new look!

Next time you look at yourself in the mirror, I hope that you're looking at the world from new lens-less glasses. Know that your look is unique and original. You deserve all the compliments that come your way!

Just like your chances of standing out as "Bad Sandy" @ Sadies, this page is NOT real.
